Preface

For this Second Edition, the Thesaurus has been revised in the light of recent research that has shown how words are really used and has made it possible to give better-matching sets of synonyms than ever before. This has been achieved using computational techniques to analyse a very large body of English—the 100-million-word British National Corpus and the Oxford Reading Programme database, which currently consists of 70 million words and is growing by about 5 million words a year.

The examples of use have been replaced by generally fuller examples taken from real evidence, making it easier for the reader to identify the appropriate set of synonyms.

The number of opposites (antonyms) has been increased, and entries now also include related words, prefixes, and suffixes, such as nocturnal at the entry for 'night', labio- at 'lip', and -cide at 'kill'.

The lists of words and names (of birds and animals, types of food, famous people, etc.) have been expanded in number and scope as well as updated.

Guide to the Thesaurus

Arrangement of synonyms

The synonyms in each entry are grouped in numbered 'synonym sets'. Major synonym sets correspond roughly to different senses of the word in a dictionary, and many sets contain finer distinctions, which are signalled by semicolons.

The synonyms in each set that are closest in meaning to the entry word are given first, usually starting with a 'core synonym' in SMALL CAPITALS. Some synonym sets have more than one core synonym if two synonyms are very close to the entry word but neither covers the whole sense; for example at audience, both spectators and listeners are given as core synonyms. Two different core synonyms may also emphasize slightly different aspects of the meaning of the entry word. For example, at prosperous, the first core synonym given is thriving, followed by a group of words closely related to that aspect of its meaning, such as flourishing and successful. Then, after a semicolon, a second core synonym, affluent, is given, with an allied group of synonyms such as wealthy and rich.

Guidance on the use of synonyms

Most of the synonyms given are part of standard English, but some are suitable only in certain contexts. These are grouped at the end of their synonym set and given the following labels:

informal, e.g. swig, dodgy: the kind of vocabulary normally only used in informal speech or writing.

formal, e.g. perquisite, adjure: normally only used in writing, in contexts such as official documents.

technical, e.g. occlusion, admixture. Words used in specific specialist fields are labelled Medicine, Nautical, etc.

poetic/literary, e.g. forsake, plenteous: normally only found in poetry or literature.

dated, e.g. toodle-oo, rotter: no longer used by the majority of English speakers, but still encountered, especially among the older generation.

historical, e.g. serfdom, ballista: still used today, but only to refer to some practice or article that is no longer part of the modern world.

humorous, e.g. retail therapy, transmogrify: normally used with humorous intent.

archaic, e.g. bootless, in sooth: very old-fashioned language, not used today except for effect.

rare, e.g. funambulist, reprehend: not in normal use today or in previous times.

Synonyms are also labelled if they are used exclusively or mainly in the English spoken in a particular part of the world, namely: British (abbreviated to Brit.), North American (N. Amer.), United States (US), Canadian, Australian (Austral.), New Zealand (NZ), South African (S. Afr.), or West Indian (W. Ind.).

Note on trademarks and proprietary status

This thesaurus includes some words which have, or are asserted to have, proprietary status as trademarks or otherwise. Their inclusion does not imply that they have acquired for legal purposes a non-proprietary or general significance, nor any other judgement concerning their legal status. In cases where the editorial staff have some evidence that a word has proprietary status this is indicated by the label trademark, but no judgement concerning the legal status of such words is made or implied thereby.
